Parents Shocked by Reports about Lakota (OH) School Superintendent

[Warning: graphic content]

There's a storm brewing in the Lakota school district north of Cincinnati.

Parents are outraged about allegations that Matt Miller, the Lakota school superintendent, has a highly compromised sexual history.

A group has launched a petition drive to put pressure on the school board to at least put Miller on administrative leave while launching a thorough internal investigation. At press time, 452 people had signed the petition.

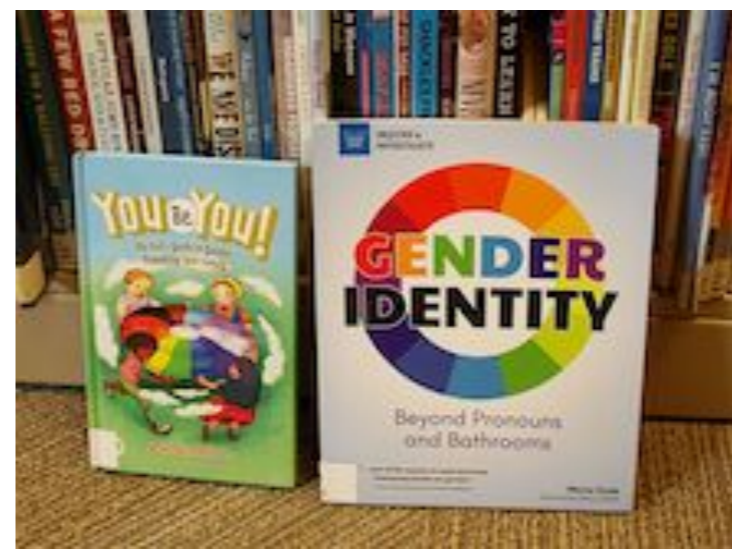

Parents want answers. The safety of the district's children should be the first concern, and many are frustrated with the secrecy and lack of appropriate response by the majority of the school board as well as the Butler County Sheriff's Department.

A police investigation was launched after the allegations were taken to the Butler County sheriff's department by a concerned parent. But law enforcement rather quickly concluded that no criminal action by Miller had taken place, apparently without thoroughly examining Miller's phones, computers, etc. None were confiscated as part of the investigation.

However, police did verify certain aspects of claims by Miller's ex-wife about the Millers' marriage-smashing sex life, activities labeled "role-playing" and "pillow talk." As more and more boundaries were breached, Miller's ex-wife refused to go the next step.
