Without Drag Queens, Will Children Be Illiterate?

by Linda Harvey

Enjoying a little light reading one recent afternoon-- perusing the Southern Poverty Law Center's annual "Year in Hate and Extremism" magazine-- I was stopped cold by one article. And I started laughing hysterically, until I wasn't.

"Fighting Illiteracy, Preserving Democracy: The Power of Drag Story Hour" weaves the preposterous narrative that drag queen story hours have the high and noble purpose of encouraging children to read and solving the illiteracy epidemic. And that, along with pushing "diversity and inclusion," is their purpose.

So when we oppose men in freakish makeup and negligees reading to toddlers it is, of course, "anti-diversity" and also apparently, anti-literacy.

Yep, SPLC caught us. We conservatives want children to remain largely illiterate. That's our story and we are sticking to it.

'Pride' Goes Out With a Whimper

From The Washington Stand
It's been a long time since Americans could sit back and actually enjoy the month of June. It was always an insufferable four weeks, breathing in the rainbow-saturated air that fell heaviest across our favorite sports, stores, shows, and social media. But the most remarkable thing about this year's Pride Month may be just how unremarkable it was. Sure, there were still parades, over-the-top political pronouncements, and colorful flags billowing from too many government buildings, but the characteristic dread and fatigue from Pride is gone — replaced by a quiet confidence that maybe, just maybe, we've been heard.

Maybe He's Not Gay: Another View on Homosexuality

Have you read Linda Harvey's book? It makes a great read for your teens during the summer months. Now in its second edition, Maybe He's Not Gay includes a chapter about the gender confusion epidemic, "Maybe He's Not...a Girl." Don't our children deserve to be well-equipped to stand with principle against this tyrannical agenda? And they should know that there are many ex- homosexuals with compelling testimonies. If your teen has a confused friend, that person has many options, and your child can share this hope with those struggling. Go HERE for more information and ordering options.

Let's continue to honor Jesus our Lord in all we do this summer.
